Hello! We are a team of researchers from universities in Canada and the United States. We want to know how youth have been involved in recovery from the 2011 wildfires in Slave Lake.

Our goal is to empower young people through research and leadership activities and to build a youth-focused understanding of disaster recovery.

Three members of our team will be in Slave Lake from May 23-30, 2013. We would like to speak with:

- High school students and recent high school graduates (14 years or older).
- Parents of current high school students or of recent graduates
- High school teachers
- Community members or leaders involved in the recovery from the wildfires
- Community organizations involved in youth/family programming

Then, over the next year and a half we will be inviting youth who were affected by the 2011 disaster, to join us in workshops using photography, video, interviews, and other creative tools to tell the story of recovery in Slave Lake and to make a difference.

If you are interested in meeting with us in May, please contact Chris or Jennifer. They can tell you more about our project, answer any questions you may have, and explore ways of including you in the study. Our contact information is on the right.
